I was introduced to Perma-Guard pet insecticidal powder approximately 8-10 weeks ago. I was intrigued by the product from its environmentally safe aspect and by the lure to find another avenue to try and help control fleas. What I found is a product that is absolutely safe and effective against fleas, ticks and other insects—I have even used it safely on newborn puppies and kittens. I have also successfully treated scabies (in cats and dogs) and ear mites in cats.

As a bonus, I have also found Perma-Guard insecticidal powder to be the cat's meow for helping control roaches, silverfish, etc., as well as fleas, in the home. It is also the most marvelous vehicle to kill ants and, so far, they have not re-emerged anywhere else in my yard.

The Perma-Guard product, without the insecticide (natural pyrethrum). Is being fed to various animals. Most notably to cattle and chickens. I have some personal experience; recently, with chickens being fed the Diatomaceous earth locally. The chickens are feeling good, actually great, according to the owner. This time of year they are molting and are very stressed. The stress is not apparent this year. I am going to monitor the intestinal parasite situation to see if we are getting any apparent control of these pests.

I wholeheartedly recommend the Perma-Guard insecticides as they appear to be absolutely safe and very effective.

Sincerely,
